Absolutism Concept Formation

You will be participating in a concept formation lesson designed to teach you the understanding of absolutism. You will uncover the critical attributes of absolutism by reading and analyzing cases, and deciding whether or not they are examples of absolutism. By the end of this lesson you should have a good understanding of the attributes of absolutism and the political changes happening in Europe during the 16\(^{th}\), 17\(^{th}\), and 18\(^{th}\) centuries.

PART 1:

a. Before you begin this activity you must define and understand the following terms:
   a. Divine Right
   b. Popular sovereignty
   c. Checks and balances
   d. Enlightened despot

b. The Hook: Look at the portrait and write a short paragraph describing what you see while answering the following questions
   a. Who is in the painting?
   b. What is in the background?
   c. What message does this portrait convey?
   d. What is the meaning?

PART 2:

a. Fill in your data chart by reading each case and answering the four questions.

b. On the back of your data chart, identify four differences and four similarities among the examples. After looking at some of the similarities and differences, work with a partner to come up with a list of three critical attributes, you will be discussing these with the class and developing a class consensus. The last thing you will do is to individually create a summary definition of the concept; these will also be discussed with the class to create a class concept.

c. To assess your understanding of the concept, you will be given four examples and must determine if they are examples of absolutism or not. If not, you must determine what attributes must be added or altered to make it an example of absolutism.

PART 3:

a. Read the brief history of Frederick the Great and determine if he was an absolute monarch or an enlightened despot?

b. After you have read the case studies and filled in your chart, you will be reading a contemporary article from the New York Times and deciding if absolutism exists today in Swaziland. As you are reading the article, be sure to write down the critical attributes that are present or missing before deciding if it would be considered absolutism or not.

Concept Formation Notes:

Directions: Fill out the worksheet below after reading “Examples of Concept” and completing your chart. Work on each section as instructed.

List at least four similarities between the examples you just read.
2.
3.
4.

List at least four differences between the examples you just read.

2.

Definition: How would you define the concept of absolutism? Write a definition in one sentence, in your own words below and be sure to include your critical attributes.
PART 2 (a):

Examples of Concept

Directions: Read the following four examples. After you read each example, go to your blank chart and fill it out. For example, read #1, and answer all four questions on your chart for concept example #1. Once you are done go on to #2 and repeat the same steps until you are finished with example #4.

1. Like King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella before him, King Phillip II of Spain centralized royal power, making all parts of the government responsible to him. He had complete authority over the government and the lives of the people during his reign from 1556 to 1598. He believed that his authority to rule came directly from God. As a result he saw himself as the guardian of the Catholic Church and made it his personal responsibility to defend the Catholic Reformation. He used his control of the Spanish army and navy to impose the Inquisition against Protestants and heretics. Without representation, the small middle class was heavily taxed by Phillip to fund his wars and build the Armada.

2. “L’etat, c’est moi,” “I am the state,” said King Louis XIV of France. Louis believed that he was the only one responsible for governing France when he ruled from 1643 to 1715. A tutor to his son once said, “As God’s representative on Earth, the king was entitled to unquestioning obedience. Louis reigned from the most magnificent building in Europe, the palace of Versailles. Full of the finest paintings, statues, chandeliers and mirrors, and surrounded by millions of flowers and plants, Versailles was the perfect symbol of Louis’ wealth and power. During his 72 year reign the Estates General, the legislative body of France, never met once. Without opposition he revoked the Edict of Nantes and taxed his people in order to wage costly wars against the Dutch and English.

3. After a journey to Western Europe, Peter the Great decided to modernize Russia. To impose his will he became the most autocratic of Europe’s monarchs, believing that his right to rule as Tsar came from God. He centralized his power and brought all Russians under his control, including the Russian Orthodox Church. Peter forced the most powerful nobles, known as boyars, to serve in either the military or state government. Peasants and serfs were required to become soldiers or work on roads, canals, and other government projects. He improved the technology; education and the military of Russia, but in the process tortured and executed thousands of people who challenged his power from 1682 to 1725.

4. According to the 1665 Kongeloven (King’s Law), The monarch of Norway “shall from this day forward be revered and considered the most perfect and supreme person on the Earth by all his subjects, standing above all human laws and having no judge above his person, neither in spiritual nor temporal [secular] matters, except God alone.” After abolishing the legislative branch known as the Rigsradet, the king was the only person in charge of the country’s affairs. Frederick III ignored the advice of his nobles, and controlled the government and military on his own.
List of Examples

Directions: Read the following four examples below and decide whether or not they are examples of the concept we are studying. Make sure to use the critical attributes and definition of the concept to test the examples. Next to each paragraph write a “yes” if it is an example, and “no” if it is not. If your answer is “no,” write why it is not an example of the concept.

1. In 1689 King William and Queen Mary became the monarchs of England. Before they were crowned, they accepted the English Bill of Rights which required the monarchy to work with Parliament to govern the country. The monarchs were required to regularly call on Parliament to meet and lost their power to suspend laws. The responsibility of coordinating the countries finances and power to tax were given to the lower house of Parliament, known as the House of Commons.

2. According to the Mandate from Heaven, the right to rule China is granted by Heaven. The Chinese believed that since there was only one Heaven, there could be only one ruler. Chinese emperors that were part of the Han dynasty referred to themselves as Sons of Heaven, and commanded respect from all their subjects. Chinese law dictated that the emperor’s position could not be challenged by anyone. Emperors handpicked governors and officials in order to centralize their authority and spread their power. Each emperor served as head of state and commander of the army. They chose whether or not to listen to advisors, but had no legislative body to monitor imperial power or prevent abuse.

3. Chosen by members of the royal family and approved by Muslim legal scholars in accordance to the Qur’an and Shari’ah (Islamic law), state issues are decided by King Abdullah, along with the Council of Ministers and Consultative Council. With no elections or political parties, it is up to the king to appoint and dismiss members of both councils. At any time the king can choose to dissolve both government bodies. The Council of Ministers is responsible for internal, external, financial, economic, educational, and defense policies, but the king maintains final authority over all state affairs.

4. In 1922 Benito Mussolini became Prime Minister of Italy. Within several years Mussolini eliminated all conventional and constitutional restraints on his power. In 1928 he outlawed political parties and abolished parliamentary elections. Through his complete control of the military and a massive campaign of propaganda, Mussolini was able to subjugate the minds of the Italian people and create a fascist state. He eventually became dictator of Italy and gained complete control of the Italian government.
PART 3 (a):

Frederick the Great-King of Prussia

Early Life
Born Frederick Wilhelm, he became Frederick II after inheriting the throne from his father in 1740. His father and family spent much of their lives creating a state which possesses an army, but an army which possesses a state.” The most powerful nobles in Prussia, known as Junkers, had the highest positions in the army. Frederick had no choice but to pursue a military career. From a very early age Frederick was trained in the art of war. His father hired a tutor to make his son love the profession of a soldier and believe that nothing else in the world could bring a prince fame and honor except warfare. He was forced to read many military books, participate in military drill and training, and set up miniature armies and conduct fake battles with toy soldiers. Frederick had a problem; he did not want to be a soldier. He preferred to play the flute and write poetry. He loved music, the theatre, and French literature. These pursuits were unacceptable to his father, and he decided to run away. When his plan was discovered he was thrown in prison and forced to watch a friend who helped plan the escape, lose his head.

Military Success
Frederick gave in to his father’s demands and continued his military education. When his father died he became king and began a successful military career. He invaded Silesia, part of the Austrian Empires, and began the War of Austrian Succession where his harsh military training took effect. During the Seven Years War (1756-1763), he was able to defeat Austria, Russia, Sweden, Saxony, and France. He later controlled a portion of Poland and ended Austrian dominance over the German States. He made brilliant use of his disciplined army, expanded Prussian territory, and forced all to accept Prussia as a great power. His exploits earned him the name Frederick the Great.

King and Administrator
As ruler of Prussia, Frederick controlled all aspects of the government, and closely monitored his officials. His many accomplishments included increasing the size and efficiency of the army, improving agriculture, introducing manufacturing, abolishing serfdom, developing a better education system, and introducing the potato. He believed in religious tolerance, abolished torture and capital punishment, and contributed to The Academy of Sciences.
PART 3 (b):

Mswati III, King of Swaziland
Excerpts form the New York Times, September 5th, 2008

Mswati III is the king of Swaziland, a land of mountainous splendor near the southern tip of Africa. He is famed for extravagant spending that contrasts sharply with his country's widespread poverty.

Mswati III has taken 13 brides; each has received a palace and a new BMW. The king’s salary is more than 30 million dollars, and invests in sugar cane, commercial property and a newspaper. Forbes.com recently listed Mswati III as the world’s 15th wealthiest monarch, estimating his fortune at $200 million.

Swazis have enjoyed decades of peace and are rightfully proud of their culture. But poverty has entrapped two-thirds of the people, leaving hundreds of thousands of them malnourished. The country has one of the worst rates of H.I.V. infection in the world. Life expectancy has fallen from 60 years in 1997 to barely half that now. Nearly a third of all children have lost a parent.

Most of Swaziland’s 1.1 million people love their monarch. God gave the country to the king, many of them say, and the king was given to the people by God. Mswati III’s father, Sobhuza II, also liked to marry. It was said that he took 70 wives, though some put the number as high as 110. Sobhuza II was king when the nation became free from British colonialism. The country was left with a constitution but Sobhuza II did not abide by this document for long. In 1973, he dissolved Parliament and eliminated political parties.

In 2005 Mswati III signed a new constitution. It was a peculiar document, guaranteeing individual liberties with one hand and preserving the monarchy’s power with the other. The king would continue to appoint the prime minister and members of the governing cabinet and the judiciary.

In the summer of 2008, frustration over the king’s extravagance increased over the scale of a giant festival, the 40-40 Celebration, so-named to honor the king’s 40th birthday and the nation’s 40th year of independence. To prepare for the event, a new 15,000-seat stadium was built and a fleet of top-of-the-line BMW sedans was ordered for the comfort of visiting dignitaries. Some 1,500 citizens grumpily marched in protest through the capital after news reports said that several of the queens and their entourages had gone on an overseas shopping trip aboard a chartered plane.
